Dead Dog Decays As Pound Delays

The maggot-ridden stench of a dead dog who lost his life beneath the porch of a house in east Torrance last week end still lay on the sidewalk several days later waiting to be carted off by a County pound truck that never arrived.

Final chapter in the life of the unidentified pooch began Wednesday of last week at the home of 72-year-old Mrs. Nancy Kenny, 21226 S. Main St., when the animal squeezed under the porch to get out of the heat of the noon-day sun.

When the dog was unable to get out of the narrow crawl space, Mrs. Kenny called the Los Angeles County Pound later that afternoon. The pound refused to send help.

THREE DAYS later when the elder Mrs. Kenny left home to spend the week end visiting her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Jean Kenny at 18612 Mettler Ave., Gardena, a slight odor had begun to emerge from under the porch. Thinking that the dog had managed to scratch his way out somehow, both women disregarded the warning smell and left.

When they returned Sunday night neighbors told them that the body of the dead animal had created a nuisance in their absence, attracting maggots and permeating the neighborhood with its offensive stench. The neighbors had tried unsuccessfully all day Sunday to get someone out from the pound to remove the carcass.

On Monday the younger Mrs. Kenny finally succeeded in getting a man out from the pound, only to be told when he surveyed the scene that he could not crawl under the porch. She urged him to stay while a neighbor child removed the dead body of the dog, and then to take it with him. The driver of the pound truck took off, saying that after the body had been removed and placed it in front of the house, it would be picked up—sometime Monday afternoon.

MOMENTS LATER, covered with long socks over his tiny hands little seven-year-old Joseph Biers slithered under the porch and removed the dog's decayed body. The two Mrs. Kennys placed it, wrapped—to keep from attracting flies and maggots—on the front curb. By Tuesday morning the pound had not yet arrived.

As the elderly lady and her daughter-in-law wait for the truck that never comes, they take turns keeping guard to prevent the neighborhood youngsters from playing with all that remains of what was a live and squealing dog one week ago.
